The City of Dublin has received $56,223.70 as part of a statewide rock salt settlement. Earlier this year, Ohio Attorney General Mike DeWine announced a settlement with Cargill and Morton Salt to resolve allegations that the companies conspired with each other between 2008 and 2010, forcing state and local governments to pay higher prices for rock salt used to treat icy roads. The companies did not admit any wrongdoing, but agreed to pay $11.5 million. Dublin was one of 848 public entities that submitted a claim to recover taxpayer dollars. The Attorney General's office distributed the settlement based on how much each entity spent on eligible salt purchases during the qualifying time period.

works by Alfred Tibor, Holocaust survivor and Columbus resident

The Columbus Dispatch 10.11.15

In the work of sculptor Alfred Tibor, hope is offered in the face of horrors. The 95-year-old Columbus resident — born to a Jewish family in Konyar, Hungary — has experienced the latter, having survived the Holocaust. Yet his art — 15 examples of which are on view at the Dublin Arts Center — seeks to be uplifting. “Considering what he’s been through in his life and his experience with World War II and all of the bigotry and hatred, he really is an extremely positive person,” said David Guion, executive director of the Dublin Arts Council.

Questline Inc., a digital marketing agency that focuses on energy utilities, is planning to move its headquarters to Dublin after outgrowing an Upper Arlington office. The company plans to add 19 jobs to a staff of 45. On Monday, the Ohio Tax Credit Authority approved a 1.3 percent, six-year jobs creation incentive that would save Questline $112,000 over the life of the agreement if it adds 18 jobs. The city of Dublin earlier this month approved a $12,000 relocation grant and a jobs-creation incentive that's capped at $18,000 over five years.

Last week, I attended the conference that launched the new Global Institute for the Study of the Intelligent Community, based in Dublin, Ohio. In the annual evaluation by the Intelligent Community Forum (ICF), Dublin has been among the most intelligent communities in the world for the last few years. Nearby Columbus, Ohio was designated the most intelligent community this past June.

'Trumpkin' is so huge, it takes 6 wigs for thatch

When Jeanette Paras paints a pumpkin, it can be a big, hairy deal. The Dublin resident is known in her Davington Drive neighborhood for carving pop-culture icons and political figures into her pumpkins, but this year she stepped up her game. Paras transformed a 374-pound pumpkin into Donald Trump's head, complete with the trademark blond hair.
